I would like to see language that provides reimbursement to the financial institutions for costs involved in protecting their customers from theft. Every time we have a compromised card for a member we have to reissue a new card, contact our member, etc. This is a very costly process for our credit union. Unfortunately, there does not seem to be any accountability on the part of processors that store credit card information. There should also be large monetary penalties paid to the government for breaches of information. I would also like to see the people that perpetrate the theft held to larger penalties.

Thank you
